

Research disclaimer.

Family history tracing is not an exact science.

Your ancestors may have left relatively little impression on past historical records for any number of reasons.

When the detailed censuses were introduced many people in the 19th century, for example, took steps to 'avoid' the census enumerators, whilst others were away from home on the night of the census and can therefore prove extremely elusive to track down.

Also, many historical records are difficult to read due to illegible handwriting, they have faded over time, multiple variations of surname spellings or have been transcribed inaccurately, making the genealogist's task even more difficult.

For these reasons every project is vulnerable to the occasional inaccuracy, Family Heritage Search do make every reasonable effort where possible to verify findings against more than one source. While the quality of my research is to a high standard, Family Heritage Search cannot guarantee the accuracy of the findings where evidence is unreliable or contradicts. If you believe that you find an inaccuracy in the research, please contact us with the full details. Family Heritage Search will then be able to verify your query and update the documents at no charge.

Family Heritage Search will make every effort to trace complete family histories for all of its clients, it is impossible to guarantee that we will be able to trace families back to any specifically stated or requested time-period.

Furthermore, we will not be held liable for any errors, inaccuracies or omissions that may possibly occur, at any time.